Q51 Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given below them in context of the passage. Certain words/phrases in the passage are printed in bold fonts to help you to locate them while answering same of the questions.

The incidents that parents retell about their child's early speech usually involve examples of the strange use of words .Having been warned that the flies bring germs into the house, one child was asked what 'germs' were and the answer was "some toy the flies play with ", It is not always possible to attach so precisely the meaning that children give to the words they use. It seems that during the early childhood many children use their limited vocabulary to refer to a large number of unrelated objects. One child first used 'bow-vow' to refer to a dog and then to a fur piece with glass eyes .Other children often relate 'bow -vow' to cows or horses.

This process is called overextension .The most common process is to over extend the meaning of a word on the basis of understanding of size ,shape and sound ,Next come movement and texture ,Thus the word 'ball' extends to all kind of round objects, including a doorknob and the moon or a 'tick -tock' many initially mean a watch but can also be used for the car -horn .This overextension is then followed by narrowing down each term as the word is learnt .for example a child may mean 'ball' for each round object like tomato, apple or a ball but has no confusion in picking out the apple when asked to. The child learn through antonyms much later .By the age of five years the child has completed the greater part of the basic language acquisition process.

The passage is mainly about :-

A The process of developing meaning

B The art of language

C Adult learning versus adolescent process

D None of these are correct

Answer Key: A

One child first used 'bow-vow' to refer to a dog and then to a fur piece with glass eyes .Other children often relate 'bow -vow' to cows or horses.

This process is called overextension .The most common process is to over extend the meaning of a word on the basis of understanding of size ,shape and sound ,Next come movement and texture ,Thus the word 'ball 'extends to all kind of round objects, including a doorknob and the moon or a 'tick -tock' many initially mean a watch but can also be used for the car -horn .This overextension is then followed by narrowing down each term as the word is learnt .for example a child may mean 'ball' for each round object like tomato, apple or a ball but has no confusion in picking out the apple when asked to.

The child learn through antonyms much later .By the age of five years the child has completed the greater part of the basic language acquisition process.

'Precisely' in the text means :

A	Perhaps
B	unmatched
C	somewhat
D	exactly
Answer Key: D

Q55 Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given below them in context of the passage certain words/phrases in the passage are printed in bold fonts to help you to locate them while answering same of the questions.

The incidents that parents retell about their child's early speech usually involve examples of the strange use of words .Having been warned that the flies bring germs into the house, one child was asked what 'germs' were and the answer was "some toy the flies play with ", It is not always possible to attach so precisely the meaning that children give to the words they use. It seems that during the early childhood many children use their limited vocabulary to refer to a large number of unrelated objects.

Q51 Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given below them in context of the passage. Certain words/phrases in the passage are printed in bold fonts to help you to locate them while answering some of the questions.

Unseen passage for comprehension

This is the era of information explosion in a world that has shrunk to drawing room proportions. In an era of information explosion, everything is as close as you want it to be. The communication revolution has made its effect on the world of sports too. Today the fax machines and computers have made it that if Stefan Edberg suffers a shock at Wimbledon at 1.30 A.M. IST, the news can comfortably make into the morning newspapers in Delhi. Today the media, especially TV and the press bestow special attention on the sportsperson and have turned them in to the best of national heroes and international celebrities. There were days when top players walked out of tournament sites to neighborhood markets and walk unnoticed for a window shopping after the matches. The times have changed now. Today Ramesh Krishnans, Kapil Devs and Ashwini Nachappas can't afford such privileges as they would be mobbed at every turn, whether it is New Delhi, Lords or Beijing. Inevitably, the information boom triggered by the media obsession with sports persons has been both a blessing and a curse for the superstars of sport. While on one hand the media focus has made them more marketable, and therefore, considerably richer - with all the endorsements and the lucrative contracts - than they would have been otherwise, the constant glare has also put enormous pressures on the best of them. Tennis fans of '50s or '60s would hardly know the name of Rod Laver's wife. Now any 12 or 13 years old seems to be able to tell the name of Stefan Edberg's girl friend. This is just one example. There are hundreds of such available in the world of sport. In such cases, where the information -if one can call it that -has nothing to do with a players game or even the player can take the media shelter behind the public's right to know? Is that right absolutely? If one's right to swing his arms ends where the others nose begins, then doesn't the right of the media to inform and that of the public to be informed and where the sports person's private life begins? Isn't there a line between journalistic license and licentious journalism in the sports columns? There is of course no attempts at pompous sermonizing here but merely an effort to see if there is a sense of awareness in a section of the sports - press of the responsibilities that go with inalienable freedom to inform.

The author's objective in writing the passage seems to be :

A	Make a comparison of old and new trend in sports journalism
B	Highlight the role of media in communication revolution
C	Make a case for a balanced flow of information in sports journalism
D	Praise the role of media in global coverage of sports events

Answer Key: C

While on one hand the media focus has made them more marketable, and therefore, considerably richer - with all the endorsements and the lucrative contracts - than they would have been otherwise, the constant glare has also put enormous pressures on the best of them. Tennis fans of '50s or '60s would hardly know the name of Rod Laver's wife. Now any 12 or 13 years old seems to be able to tell the name of Stefan Edberg's girl friend. This is just one example. There are hundreds of such available in the world of sport. In such cases, where the information -if one can call it that -has nothing to do with a players game or even the player can take the media shelter behind the public's right to know? Is that right absolutely? If one's right to swing his arms ends where the others nose begins, then doesn't the right of the media to inform and that of the public to be informed and where the sports person's private life begins? Isn't there a line between journalistic license and licentious journalism in the sports columns? There is of course no attempts at pompous sermonizing here but merely an effort to see if there is a sense of awareness in a section of the sports - press of the responsibilities that go with inalienable freedom to inform.

NOTE:- CHOOSE the word that is most nearby the same in meaning as the word given in bold in the passage.

Unseen passage for comprehension

This is the era of information explosion in a world that has shrunk to drawing room proportions. In an era of information explosion, everything is as close as you want it to be. The communication revolution has made its effect on the world of sports too. Today the fax machines and computers have made it that if Stefan Edberg suffers a shock at Wimbledon at 1.30 A.M. IST, the news can comfortably make into the morning newspapers in Delhi. Today the media, especially TV and the press bestow special attention on the sportsperson and have turned them in to the best of national heroes and international celebrities. There were days when top players walked out of tournament sites to neighborhood markets and walk unnoticed for a window shopping after the matches. The times have changed now. Today Ramesh Krishnans, Kapil Devs and Ashwini Nachappas can't afford such privileges as they would be mobbed at every turn, whether it is New Delhi, Lords or Beijing. Inevitably, the information boom triggered by the media obsession with sports persons has been both a blessing and a curse for the superstars of sport. While on one hand the media focus has made them more marketable, and therefore, considerably richer - with all the endorsements and the lucrative contracts - than they would have been otherwise, the constant glare has also put enormous pressures on the best of them. Tennis fans of '50s or '60s would hardly know the name of Rod Laver's wife. Now any 12 or 13 years old seems to be able to tell the name of Stefan Edberg's girl friend. This is just one example.
